Rear-end Wrecks Vex, Also Cause Pains in Neck

The "pain in the neck" resulting from a rear-end collision isn't always limited to the cost and inconvenience of having a smashed radiator or crumpled trunk lid repaired, the California Highway Patrol stated recently.

The patrol referred to a recent medical report telling of severe neck and nervous system injuries growing out of even minor rear-end accidents and added a few tips on how to avoid such mishaps.

Patrol Commissioner B. R.
Caldwell said that while high speed is a factor in many rear-end collisions, scores occur at comparably slow speeds because drivers persist in following each other too closely.

To prevent these neck-jarring rear-end smashups at any speed, Caldwell suggested that motorists stay behind other vehicles at least the minimum safe distance—1 car length for every 10 miles of speed.

Caldwell told motorists who find themselves being followed too closely that their best move is to pull over, where safe to do so, and let their impatient fellow-driver go by.

When a rear-end collision seems unavoidable, the medical report suggested that covering and supporting the head with the arms would afford some protection.
